Dive into the history of the sea

Through the sustainable tourism project: RIMARTES. Riches of the sea, treasures of the deep, we want to forge an encounter with the immense wealth of the Galician sea and our underwater heritage.

We have more than 300 kilometres of coastline and fifty wrecks to discover between the Gulf of Ártabro, the Costa da Morte (Coast of Death) and Estuary of Muros - Noia, under the sea and from land. Here we highlight some of the most interesting shipwrecks due to their historical relevance or because they are authentic submerged museums.

Lights for sailors

Lighthouses are a fundamental visual system to aid maritime navigation. Every so often, the lamp at the top of the tower emits white, green or red beams of light as it rotates through 360°. Each lighthouse sends out a unique light signal. No two are the same!

There are these 16 between Bergondo and Porto do Son:

Emotional routes

The memory of the sea on land

The experiential tourism project: RIMARTES. Riches of the sea, treasures of the deep is an encounter with history, culture and other civilisations.

Wrecks from different periods and multiple nationalities are within reach of divers of all levels; who are looking for new experiences and discoveries under the sea, but also for those who, from land, want to find out about the vestiges that these historical events have left us.

Along these three routes, we will reveal the link between shipwrecks with natural sites, civil and military buildings, sculptures, lighthouses or museums. Take advantage of your visit to taste the gastronomy of the sea in the local hospitality network. Check out the directory at www.rimartes.com.

ATLANTIC BASTION ROUTE

The coast of the Gulf of Ártabro stands out due to its strategic location on the European Atlantic arc with a capricious, sometimes treacherous orography, dotted with defensive bastions.

COAST OF DEATH ROUTE, LEGENDS AND SHIPWRECKS

The Costa da Morte (Coast of Death) is the most feared stretch by sailors, of all Spanish coasts and the one with the most sinister fame due to a name that emerged after a tragic shipwreck.

THE BOUNDARY OF OS MEIXIDOS ROUTE

Os Meixidos Shallows which, along its brethren Os Brullos and A Ximiela, spread out like a minefield at about four miles from the nearest coast.
